AT SEA.

Shall we, the storm tossed sailors, weep
For those who may not again Or wisely envy them and keep Our pity for the living men?

Beyond the weary walls of sea, Beyond the wilder wastes of death,
I strain my gaze and cry to thee,
Whose still heart never answerseth.

Oh, brother, is thy coral bed So sweet that wilt not leave my speech?
This hand, methinks, I feel were dead.
To thy dear hand would strive to reach.

I would not, if God gave me choice For each to bear the other's part That mine should be the silent voice,
And thine the heard, aching heart.

Ah, well for any voyage done, Whatever its end or port or reef.
Better the voyage not begun
For all ships sail the sea of grief.

—James Jeffrey Roche in Angelus Magazine.

A LUNATIC BALL.

As this story traveled in a roundabout way it may have been elaborated and built up before it came to hand, but the facts, as nearly as they can be learned, are about as follows: Mr. Melton, a young man interested in the lumber trade, traveled on a suburban train one Friday night to attend the weekly dance at the asylum for the insane.

Mr. Melton is constantly longing for "experiences." He would rather look at an opium joint than a donation party and would rather go slumming than attend a Sunday school picnic. The ball at the insane asylum appealed to his love for the picturesque. Lowry, the politician, had promised to take him out, and Melton had not allowed him to forget the promise.

Lowry came aboard the train at one of the stations on the way out, and the two were warmly welcomed when they arrived at the asylum, for this Lowry was a companionable man of considerable influence.

As Melton stood in the doorway of the ballroom and glanced at the rows of well behaved and rather abashed people against the wall he could hardly believe that he was so different from the others. He reflected that if he were to arrive some morning and tell the official boards that he was the emperor of China and had more money than he could use he might become one of this company.

Except that many of them were pale and melancholy and a few of them were heavy eyed, intent on studying the floor, the assemblage would have compared favorably with any chance gathering of respectable, everyday people.

He knew, of course, that the violent patients or those totally demented were not allowed at the ball. The company was made up of convalescents or those whose vision was merely twisted so that they could not see things in their proper relation. Some of the younger men had attired themselves with particular care and wore buttonhole bouquets. Many of the women, too, bore the outward signs of gaiety. Melton was rather disappointed to find this "evening."

"I want you to dance this evening," said Superintendent Lucas, standing at his elbow. "One trouble with the visitors is that they stand around and stare at the patients as if they were a lot of fools. Now, these people are not dangerous. You needn't believe everything they tell you, but if you mix up with them and are friendly you'll find them
